In 1576, the English explorer Martin Frobisher explored the coast of present-day Canada and claimed it for England.

Rivalry and Conflict

In the 17th century, France and England began to compete for control of North America. The two nations established colonies along the Atlantic coast, and they often fought over territory and resources. The most famous conflict between the two nations was the French and Indian War, which lasted from 1754 to 1763. The war ended with the defeat of France, and England gained control of most of North America.

Cooperation and Alliance

Despite their rivalry, France and England also cooperated on occasion. In 1778, France allied with the American colonies in their war against England. The French provided the colonists with weapons and supplies, and they helped to train the Continental Army. The French alliance was a major factor in the American victory in the Revolutionary War.
