

Griffin, the Messenger Dog of the Great War

Griffin was a German Shepherd who served as a messenger dog in the British Army during World War I. He was born in 1914, and he was just a puppy when the war broke out. However, he quickly showed himself to be a brave and loyal dog, and he was soon trained to be a messenger dog.

Messenger dogs were used to deliver messages between troops on the front lines. They were often used in dangerous situations, and they had to be able to run quickly and follow. Griffin was a natural messenger dog, and he quickly became one of the most trusted dogs in his unit.
