Here We Are Now is a powerful and moving novel about two families who are brought together by a tragic accident. The story explores the themes of love, loss, and finding home, and will stay with readers long after they finish the last page.

The novel begins with a car accident that kills the parents of two young children, Navin and Layla. The children are left orphaned and alone, and they are taken in by their extended family. Navin is sent to live with his aunt and uncle in a small town in Ohio, while Layla is sent to live with her grandparents in a big city.

Both children struggle to adjust to their new lives. Navin is shy and withdrawn, and he has difficulty making friends. Layla is more outgoing, but she is also angry and resentful. She blames her grandparents for the death of her parents, and she refuses to accept their love.

Over time, both children begin to heal. Navin makes friends with a kind-hearted girl named Rose, and he learns to open up about his feelings. Layla learns to forgive her grandparents, and she begins to accept their love.

Here We Are Now is a beautifully written and emotionally resonant novel. Warga's characters are complex and well-developed, and the story is both heartbreaking and heartwarming. The novel is a must-read for anyone who has ever experienced loss or who has ever struggled to find their place in the world.
